1 Prompt

This homework is a follow-up from your work done for homework 2, please re-familiarize yourself with the “plot” of that assignment and what work you have from it. Please also ensure you have reviewed my comments and suggestions on your work as well.

The clinical psychologist was very impressed with your annotated bibliography on psychotherapy for PTSD! They found it very helpful in guiding their own reading. They are feeling so inspired that they have actually asked for your help writing an academic paper for publication. Given that you read and summarised those 10 sources, they are guessing you are feeling pretty confident on the existing literature and have asked you to plan the introduction section of the paper.

For the publication, they are specifically trying to address the research question of, “How do different forms of PTSD psychotherapy differ in their efficacy of treating symptoms of anxiety?” The introduction section needs to provide at least enough detail in order to give context to that question and describe the existing evidence in that area. Your goal is to write an outline of the introduction that identifies where sources could be appropriately cited to support this research. An outline is oftentimes bullet points and brief thoughts with citations to help organize the flow of your introduction.

You will use all the citations from homework 2 that you thought were appropriate to this topic. If you correctly identified one of the sources as being unrelated (or I pointed it out for you), you may omit it from this assignment. In this homework, I will provide a recommended set of headers/sub-topics that you organize the citations under, but you may modify/add new headers if you feel it is useful (see Recommended Headers). The result of the headers and bullet points is that you will have a good start on an outline of the introduction, to be transformed into writing later on.

You must:

- Use at least all the appropriate citations from your annotated bibliography, as identified in Homework 2. Include additional citations if you need to reference a separate idea not already accounted for by your current bibliography.
  - Write a set of headers (at least 3) to organize the ideas of the introduction and/or use the provided headers under Recommended Headers.
  - Under each header, give bullet point thoughts for each relevant citation, with at least two sentences per citation. These thoughts should explain how and why you are using the citation in this spot, not simply be re-summary of the source. However, your annotations from homework 2 are sure to be helpful!
  - Each bullet point should be ended with an in-text citation of the relevant article to make that statement
  - Include a reference section congruent with all used in-text citations.
