1 Last Week Review

- We reviewed and quizzed on content from week 4, regarding ethics in psychological research
- We began navigating how to do good measurement in research and how it contributes to the overarching construct validity of our studies
- We had dove into the different types of measurement reliability and measurement validity, as well as some of the statistics associated with each one of those
- We went over how to find validated, existing measures and some statistics for how well they perform in regards to reliability and validity

2 Learning Objective(s)

- Explain how carefully prepared questions improve the construct validity of a poll or survey.
- Describe how researchers can make observations with good construct validity.
- Be able to apply the concepts of chapter 5 measurement reliability and validity to self-report and observational measures/tools
- Understand the nuance and drawbacks of certain strategies in creating measures, as well as common pitfalls in writing questions and structuring answers
- Have an idea of strategies that can be employed to minimize problems in surveys and observations.
